Explanatory Note:

* TPP (two-party-preferred vote count) is usually the same as TCP (two-candidate-preferred vote count), however they are different when the final two candidates are not ALP and Coalition candidates. This is referred to as 'non-classic' TCP.

At the 2007 election in the divisions of Kennedy, Melbourne and New England, the final two candidates in the count were not from the ALP and the Coalition. In these divisions, a further scrutiny for information was conducted for statistical purposes. This count allocated votes to the ALP and leading Coalition party candidates using the next available preference on the ballot papers to show what the result of the count would have been had these candidates been the two leading candidates.

For those divisions where the candidates in the TCP vote count were not both ALP and Coalition candidates, the TCP results were:

NSW	New England	Ind: 74.33	NP: 25.67	Redistribution 2009	Safe Independent
VIC	Melbourne	ALP: 54.71	Aus. Greens: 45.29	Election Result 2007	Marginal Labor
QLD	Kennedy	Ind: 66.29	ALP: 33.71	Redistribution 2009	Safe Independent

These are divisions, post 2008/2009 redistributions, whose notional seat status indicates a change from one party to another.

Australia's Electoral Boundaries

This map is for illustrative purposes only to indicate the location of electoral division boundaries for the House of Representatives.

The number of House of Representative seats for each state and territory for the next federal election will be as follows:

New South Wales	48
Victoria	37
Queensland	30
Western Australia	15
South Australia	11
Tasmania	5
Australian Capital Territory	2
Northern Territory	2
Total	150

Following the 2007 federal election, redistributions of federal electoral divisions were determined for the Northern Territory and Western Australia in 2008 and for New South Wales, Queensland and Tasmania in 2009.

Redistributions took place in Tasmania, the Northern Territory and Western Australia because seven years had passed since the last one. While these redistributions redrew the boundaries to ensure similar numbers of electors in each division, no new divisions were created and none were abolished.

Redistributions of electoral boundaries were undertaken in New South Wales and Queensland following a change in their entitlement to seats in the House of Representatives due to population changes. The number of divisions in New South Wales decreased from 49 to 48. The redistribution resulted in changes to the boundaries in a majority of divisions, and the abolition of the then Division of Reid. Other changes were the renaming of the Division of Lowe to the Division of Reid, and the Division of Prospect to the Division of McMahon.

The number of divisions in Queensland increased from 29 to 30. The redistribution resulted in changes to the boundaries of a majority of the divisions and the creation of a new division named the Division of Wright.

Note: The map includes a chart showing marginality of seats in ascending order. These figures are based on Two Party Preferred (TPP) vote count figures from the 2007 federal election for Victoria, South Australia, Australian Capital Territory and the Northern Territory where preferences have been distributed to the Australian Labor Party and the Liberal/National Coalition.

As New South Wales, Queensland, Tasmania and Western Australia have undergone a redistribution since the last federal election, notional TPP vote count figures for these states have been calculated.
