I believe that you have done a great job with all of the boundary changes, in particular admire the changes that were made in the Illawarra region with the seats of Whitlam and Cunningham. The dividing line of the Windang bridge, which is iconic in symbolising a dividing of 2 areas, and the rest of the Lake being used similarly as a boundary, is a great idea and looks great aesthetically. This will be perfect for the future growth of the 2 seats and balance things out perfectly. One thing I don't understand though is why you would get rid of the electorate name of North Sydney, which is a federation seat, and not choose Warringah instead. The boundaries can stay in the same spot but instead of calling the seat Warringah, opt to call it North Sydney so that the seat name can stay in place for years to come, given the name Warringah doesn't have any importance. If this change is done, it will be perfect and the rest of the changes will be greatly admired overall.
